One by one South Africa's rural towns have succumbed as a catastrophic drought tightens its grip, turning vast areas into ground zero. Collapsed water infrastructure, theft and corruption have brought the future into the present with a bang.

With South Africa experiencing a water deficit of 38 billion cubic metres annually, and needing an additional R30 billion a year to bridge the gap in water services infrastructure, the situation is a daily living nightmare for thousands of people.

KwaZulu-Natal – Police are investigating a fire that's destroyed more than 1 000 shacks in Durban, in the early hours of Sunday morning.

It's still unclear what sparked the blaze at the Richmond Road informal settlement. Over a thousand people have been left homeless. Shack dwellers organisation, Abahlali baseMjondolo, is appealing to the public for assistance. "We are appealing for help. The community doesn't even have a hall where victims can be housed temporarily. We are also making calls to individuals to reach out to those affected by the fire," said SBU Zikode from Abahlali baseMjondolo.
