Question 1: Comprehension

Read the text below and answer the questions set.

Terror Strikes...ACNE!

The teenager's plague

- 1 You might want to call it an epidemic, but it is not contagious, and it takes on many different forms in the young people it affects. Some of you (but only a few) will be lucky enough to sail through your teenage years without having to worry about pimples – but most of you will be hit sooner rather than later, no matter what you do. Acne is so common; it's considered a normal part of puberty. But knowing that doesn't make it easier if you've got a big pimple on your face.
- 2 In some people it starts early and hangs on for years. In others it may wait until the age of sixteen and seventeen or even twenty to appear. Still others have to suffer so-called 'flare ups': that means they sometimes have it and they sometimes don't.
- 3 The good news is that in most people spots clear up completely – eventually. It does, however, leave scars; often these marks are not the kind you can see on the outside; they are scars on the inside, like shyness and feelings of insecurity.
- 4 Acne cannot be passed from one person to another, and – strictly speaking – it isn't even a disease. It has never killed anyone.
- 5 So, what is acne and what can you do about it?
- 6 Acne is caused by blockages and inflammation inside the hair follicles which produce lumps beneath the surface of the skin - pimples. It shows up as different types of bumps: blackheads - open pores that get clogged and have a darker top; whiteheads - closed pores that get clogged and bulge out from the skin, pimples, or cysts.
- 7 Teens get acne because of the hormone changes that come with puberty. If your parents had acne as teens, it's more likely that you will too. For most people, though, acne goes away almost completely by the time they are out of their teens.

- 8 Sometimes we search the internet to try and find some miracle cure for acne, even though we suspect that nothing will really work. Young people who are struck with this awful, yet normal, condition sometimes do funny things.
- 9 The best thing you can do is to keep your face, neck and shoulders clean with soap and water and wait. DON'T scrub your face with a washcloth — acne can't be scrubbed away, and scrubbing may make it worse by irritating the skin and pores. By the time you reach your twenties the acne should have, and probably would have, disappeared as quietly as it came.
- 10 So, what more needs to be said? Not much. Just that, acne is quite normal, and it DOES go away – just be patient, hang in there.

A wholesome teenager is a happy teenager.

Life can be difficult and have many challenges. We must be good fighters to have a chance to succeed in the battle. Let us talk about how one can achieve a happy life as a teenager.

It is important to take care of yourself, and one way to do so is to shower yourself with love and attention and give yourself self-affirmation daily. Look at yourself in the mirror and repeat to yourself that there is no one like you and everyone wants to be like you.

Self-respect is an important skill that will guide you. Ask yourself why you should not respect yourself and cherish what you have. Investing in your personal development can increase your happiness, so take advantage of any opportunity to stay active and learn a new skill. For example, start doing extra mural activities like music, drawing, making crafts, etc.

If you isolate yourself from friends and family, you may feel lonely. Talk to them and make plans to do things together. You may play simple games like chess, cards, and snakes & ladders. You may watch films together or even read and discuss books together.

Mixing with peers is important for character development because you will learn and be educated on a variety of issues by discussing various topics with different people.

Being grateful for our families and friends teaches us to be connected to what we have. Above all, try to avoid negative thoughts. What's done is done. Don't cry over spilled milk. Instead concentrate on the next step and be happy.

Question 4: Language Structures and Conventions

Read the text below and answer the questions set.

Sincerely yours

Handwriting is a simple and beautiful way of connecting with others, but it may be a dying art.

- 1 The loss of handwriting in our high-tech world is saddening. People of all ages and professions (mostly doctors) have bad handwriting as keyboards replace pen and paper. School children love doing assignments on computer and struggle to write, having had little practice.
- 2 The older generation learnt to write by dipping a pen in ink and then carefully forming letters. After that came the fountain pen and then the ballpoint pen. Handwriting dominated every aspect of school-going children's lives from the first moment they started to shape letters.
- 3 Handwritten letters are as rare as square apples. Few of us write letters any longer, even to our nearest and dearest. We communicate by e-mail, fax, SMS, and phone. All these methods are faster, but the trajedy is that the communication is lost after the message has been delivered. Just by pressing a 'delete' button, an entire history can be destroyed.
- 4 Should children still be taught to write with pen and paper? Should pen and paper be kept alive when laptops and mobiles are faster and more accurate? Handwritten cards, letters and notes from dear family members and friends who have passed away are precious possessions. We should write thank-you notes to friends and family, postcards instead of e-mails and SMS messages when they travel and keep handwritten journals for their own memories.
- 5 Steven Miller, the archivist at an art gallery said, "Saving material in digital format only is risky and unstable. We do not know how long it will survive.
